The Horticulture Program at the Charles River Center in Needham, Massachusetts is an innovative, therapeutic program that educates adults with developmental disabilities to grow and tend organic produce and flowers, care for farm animals, and interact with the natural environment. Established in 2014, individuals who participate enjoy the entire growing process--from soil preparation, to seed sowing, to plant care, to harvesting.

To date, over 100 individuals with developmental disabilities such as autism, Down syndrome, and cerebral palsy have developed and strengthened transferrable skills for future employment, and are gaining numerous physical and therapeutic benefits.
